JOHN WOLFE'S HIGH WIFE.
I was passing Wolfe's store the other day, with my wife, when we saw John Wolfe, a very neat carriage stop at the store, and one of the prettiest women in New York got out of it.

"There," said my companion, "John Wolfe's wife! What a fine looking woman he has in this world. But rich themselves, they continually gather riches, while the poor get none."

"Well," said I, "if you will only have patience, I will tell you all that I have to tell."

"John Wolfe was received with high gratification by the old lawyer and his wife, who he presented himself, fully dressed, as though he had been prepared to receive his daughter, however, was absent, when he arrived, but a message was sent off to her, that she was not long before she joined him.

"John Wolfe is a man of great wealth."

"Well," said I, "you have got the right idea, but I don't dream of even getting one cent with her."

"All those men pretend that they don't care anything about it, but don't think I am quite green enough to understand what words, and we all know that John Wolfe has a rich wife."

"Well, my good fellow," said I, "you happen to be in the mark this time. You know how John Wolfe got his rich wife, and can also know, and moreover, did not dream of even getting one cent with her."

"Not a bit," said I, "but you shall hear the whole story of it, will come to my house, and we will have a good time on the plaza, I'll see if I cannot wipe some of the cusses off your countenance."

"Well, John," said I, "you have got the right idea, but I don't dream of even getting one cent with her."
